Saint Patrick (c. AD 385–461) was a Christian missionary and bishop who is credited with bringing Christianity to Ireland and helping establish the Irish church. He later became the patron saint of Ireland, and his life is commemorated each year on Saint Patrick's Day. Patrick's mission helped lay the foundation for Ireland becoming one of the most Christianized regions in early medieval Europe, which later produced missionaries who evangelized much of Europe. He died around March 17, AD 461, the date that later became St. Patrick's Day.
